Regular Plastisol Screenprint

Screen printing involves creating a stencil (screen), and then using that stencil to apply layers of ink on the printing surface. Each color is applied using a different stencil, one at a time, combined to achieve the final look.

Heat Transfer

Heat transfer is the process of printing onto special transfer paper and using a heat press to transfer it onto a shirt. Much like the old iron-ons you could buy at craft stores, these transfers are kind of like stickers, meaning the image will lie on top of the shirt and has a different texture than the surrounding material. Unlike those old iron-ons, these are professional-quality transfers with vivid colors and durability similar to that of screenprint.

Heat Transfers can be applied to many clothing items, as well as novelty items such as mouse pads, puzzles, license plates, etc. The application is virtually unlimited! Depending on the type of transfer you choose, you can customize the softness, the vibrancy of color, the glossiness and the thickness of the background.

With hundreds of different transfer materials available for different applications and special effects, heat transfer is also one of the most versatile decoration methods.
